"ON LOCATION" ✓

By Hal E. Roach.

The comedy opens with "Snub" assigned to his duties as general caretaker at a beautiful new residence. The owner and his wife leave for the day, giving Pollard instructions to take particular care of the front lawn and flower beds. Hardly have they left when the motion picture Company arrives with their ensemble of "extras", cameramen, carpenters, and hangers-on. The director immediately chooses the little home as the "location" for his next scene. Before "Snub" can prevent him, the entire outfit takes possession of the front lawn where a battle scene is to be staged. When the camera "shooting" commences, Pollard spoils a number of scenes by leaping on the VILLAIN when he persecutes the heroine. Finally "Snub" is prevailed upon to take the part of the hero, and forgetting his position, and the instructions going with the job, he leads the attack of the soldiers tearing down the white picket fence and almost leaving the residence in ruins. When the owner and his wife return they are greeted with a scene of havoc and destruction. An unusual surprise finish closes the picture.
